SHOOM!

A special system that converts the pilot's brain waves into actions

The Shaman Frame is an integral component of this Gundam's design. This remarkable system, utilized in the Kestrel, is a device that reads the pilot's brain waves and converts them into actions.

When operating a high-mobility machine like the Gundam Kestrel, this system is practical as it is comparable to a

Quasi-Psycommu system as a machine control device. Best described as "a machine that can be controlled with thoughts."

▶▶ The Shaman Frame is also installed in the Gundam Gullinbursti that Jorm used in the simulator.

Souichi Obino

After leaving the Titans, he transferred to the AEUG and was a test pilot for the Gundam Kestrel. He was stationed on the battleship Delphi at the end of the Gryps War.

The development team for the Kestrel originated from two separate organizations

In addition to the pilot Van Asilano, many others were involved in the development of the Gundam Kestrel, including Doctor Alvis, who served as the machine's development chief at the AEUG, and Souichi Obino, the test pilot before Van was involved. Because this mobile suit is equipped with special systems including the Shaman Frame, complete adjustments were required before it could be utilized in actual combat.

◀ Christian Kirk also once served as the captain on Van's mothership. He was also Van and Danica's mentor at the military academy.

What is the Shaman Frame?
